Last summer, Katrin received funding from the Arts Council to spend a period of time in creative research and development. Since then, her work has moved on from her range of decorative domestic ceramics. She has been painting and printmaking, and has begun a new body of work in ceramics of one off larger scale decorated platters, bowls, vases and jugs.

Katrin's ceramics are all hand made in white earthenware clay, with decorations hand applied with coloured slips and underglazes, using a variety of methods – paper cut resists, trailing, sponging and painting.

“I have been looking at trees in the countryside near where I live and in my neighbourhood, on the way to my studio from my house. I love the symmetry and delicacy of the branches in winter time, and the buds in spring, like a secret unfolding.

I've been making paintings and prints of still lives of my work and that of other contemporary studio ceramics and have discovered a strong creative link with the poetry of Edward Thomas – some of which has inspired the imagery on my large platters.”
